BUILDING COMPOSTING INFRASTRUCTURE: HOW DROP-OFF STATIONS SERVE AS POINTS OF COLLECTION AND EDUCATION

Nigel Deacon

metroSTOR

This presentation will highlight the critical role of organic waste drop-off stations within organics recycling infrastructure, presenting practical and tested concepts applicable to municipalities, solid waste districts, private haulers, and community composters.

We will revisit successful models and case studies, share innovative technologies, and discuss real-world challenges and solutions.

The metroSTOR team have been developing recycling infrastructure solutions for over a decade, helping municipalities and communities increase waste diversion with robust cart and dumpster enclosures that embrace established behaviour change principles – clear communication and user-friendly operation. Nigel will share insights on how this approach can encourage resident participation in community organics drop-off programmes in a cost-effective way, while also protecting against contamination.

Nigel is a founder and Director at metroSTOR and has worked in the global waste diversion space for over a decade, developing neighbourhood infrastructure solutions in the form of trashcans, dumpster enclosures and smart bins. His mantra is influencing waste disposal behaviour through the provision of accessible deposit points which combine clear communication with a user-friendly interface to remove obstacles for the target audience, while preventing unauthorized use. This enables cities, businesses and multi-family building managers to manage their trash, recycling and organics efficiently while maintaining a safe, clean environment at all times.
